Proceedings of the XV Conference of the Italian Association for Wind Engineering ,2019 This volume gathers the latest advances, innovations, and applications in the field of wind engineering, as presented by leading international researchers and engineers at the XV Conference of the Italian Association for Wind Engineering (IN-VENTO 2018), held in Naples, Italy on September 9-12, 2018. It covers highly diverse topics, including aeroelasticity, bluff-body aerodynamics, boundary layer wind tunnel testing, computational wind engineering, structural dynamics and reliability, wind-structure interaction, flow-induced vibrations, wind modeling and forecast, wind disaster mitigation, and wind climate assessment. The contributions, which were selected by means of a rigorous international peer-review process, highlight numerous exciting ideas that will spur novel research directions and foster multidisciplinary collaboration among different specialists.

Improve Energy Production by Using High Efficiency Smart Wind Turbine Blade Jiale Li,2018 Wind energy is considered as one of the most promising green energy sources for its renewable, sustainable, and worldwide availability. Traditional wind farms usually contain hundreds of wind turbines at locations with high quality of wind speed. However, there are more and more distributed wind turbines installed nowadays. Distributed wind turbines are installed at or near the point of end-

use for the purposes of meeting on-site energy demand and are sometimes installed at locations with unfavorable wind quality. Increasing the power efficiency to take advantage of both low and high wind speed is of great importance for the wind energy industry. Optimal designs of the wind turbine blade have been the subject of extensive research, and significant progress has been accomplished in the past years. This study reviewed previous research to lay down a knowledge base for investigating innovative wind turbine blades. Two innovative wind turbine blades, extensible blade and bio-inspired blade are introduced in this study. The extensible `smart' blade will be extended at low wind speed to harvest more wind energy; on the other hand, it will be retracted to its original shape when the wind speed is above the rated wind speed to protect the blade from damages by high wind loads. An established aerodynamic model is implemented in this paper to evaluate and compare the power output of extensible blades versus a baseline conventional blade. The bio-inspired blade is inspired from the leading-edge tubercles on the humpback whale flippers can improve the hydrodynamic performance of humpback whale. This research investigates the potential of bio-inspired blade technology to improve the performance in increasing wind energy output for the small horizontal axis wind turbine. The high lift low Reynolds number airfoil S1223 was chosen in this research, and the wind tunnel test was conducted in the Control & Energy Systems Center at Case Western Reserve University. The result shows that the blade with a shorter wavelength and larger wavelength of tubercles has better performance in increasing the maximum power coefficient. Additionally, the tubercles can delay the stall significantly comparing to the reference blade. Overall, this research provides insights into the wind resource of different terrain types in Cleveland area and introduces details about two innovative wind turbine blades, which could increase the energy production of the wind turbines.
